Note that the bibliography style used here (a slightly modified `dcu`) does not show all the information that was included in the `.bib` file when formatting references. You should still enter as much information as you can: one day you might cite the article using a different bibliography style, which does use information from other fields.

The BIBTEX entries (with abstracts suppressed) are shown below. Note:

- the escaping of special characters in the `url` fields
- the use of the n-dash (`--`) for ranges
- the use of BIBTEX's pre-defined "strings" for month names
- the use of the concatenation operator # in month fields
